The series depicts high-profile or bizarre cases of women charged with murder. Each episode outlines whether the murder motivation was revenge cheating husband or lover, a large insurance payout, or ending up with years of abuse, with every murder in the circumstances as unique as women profiled. [2] Snapped premiere on August 6, 2004 on Oxygen. Since then, it has become the network's longest series, with 28 certain seasons and sixteen years in production (and two cut-offs) surpassing seventeen seasons and thirteen years at bad girls club. The show also played a major role in the decision by parent company NBCUniversal to resume Oxygen as a crime network in 2017. The Synb list features non-fiction stories of people who have committed murder or attempted murder or are accused of committing or attempting to commit murder. Often the goal is the individual's spouse. The program is edited in documentary style using a central voice-over narration by actress Jody Flader, as well as interviews with people with first-hand knowledge of the case, including law enforcement officials, lawyers, journalists, family members of both victims and accused persons, and sometimes criminals or victims themselves. A few rare episodes during the series run have centered on male perpetrators, but a larger number of episodes have featured men who conspired with central women to plead guilty to a crime. Production Snapped first aired on August 6, 2004, in a pilot episode of Celeste Beard Johnson[5] The series is currently in its twenty-eighth season of production at Jupiter Entertainment. [6] Actress Laura San Giacomo and Ronnie Farer told the first and second seasons respectively. [7] [8] Sharon Martin took on the role of narrator in the third season with a distinct and pronounced oral rhythm. She got extra credit as a serial supervising producer. [1] In February 2018, Martin announced that he would no longer be going to show the series. [9] The new narrator is actress Jody Flader, according to end-of-episode credits and Flader's website. [10] In October 2020, Oxygen announced that in episode 500 of the series, oxygen had two weeks of experience billed as Snapped: Killer Women Event. The event will include an original pilot episode and a never-before-seen episode. The event ended with a jot of the 500 episode, focusing on the murder of Randy Sheridan, on November 22, 2020.
